Edward J. Hopkins was a conspicuous figure in English ecclesiastical music. He was born on June 36, 1818, in Westminster, and was admitted eight years later to the choir of the Chapel Royal, of which he remained a member until his voice changed in 1835. One year later, when he was born of organist at Mitcham in Surrey and was successful. He had at that time been for several years a pupil of Thomas Walmisley, organist at the Church of St. Martin-in-the-Pieids. His second appointment was at St. Peter's, Islington, where he went in 1838 at this time he first attracted attention as a composer by winning the Gresham gold medal for his anthem "God Is Gone Up." In 1843 Mr. Hopkins's grrangements for the organ began to attract attention. In this same year he played at his first probationary service in the Temple Church and a few months later was appointed "Organist to the Honorable Society of the Temple." He held the place for fifty-five years, retiring in 1898, like had prepared many arrangements for the organ and had become an authority of The Organ, "written in collaboration with Dr. Rembault. He composed a number of services, anthems and voluntaries and prepared a voluminous book of poslins and anthems for the use of the Temple Church."
